emphasising the importance of maintaining the Service Registers of subordinate officers correctly and keeping them up to date. The responsibilities of such delay are shifted from one office to the other without taking note of the difficult position of the parties.

2. With a view to enforcing the strict observance of the existing rules and to prevent delays, the following instructions are issued—

(1) The papers relating to final and anticipatory pensions papers should be attended to in all the offices and at all stages promptly.

(2) The Heads of Departments should see that the Service Books of all the staff working under them are correctly maintained up to date and they should make arrangements to watch the progress of the pension records when they pass through them and any delay on the part of their subordinates should be dealt with properly in time and necessary disciplinary action should also be taken.

(3) The Heads of Departments should see that the cases relating to anticipatory pensions are disposed of within two months from the date of retirement of officials and final pensions within six months and relaxation of the same may be viewed with the least sympathy by taking disciplinary action against the officers concerned for such delay.

3. The Heads of Departments are requested to observe the above instructions and to impress upon all officers concerned the need to pay proper attention and avoid delay in the disposal of pension papers at any stage. They are hereby required to instruct all the subordinate offices to see that all the pending cases are disposed within three months from the date of this order.

4. The Commissioner, Local Self-Government and Deputy Commissioners are requested to issue suitable special instructions to all Local Bodies regarding the prompt disposal of pension papers pending in their offices.
